Cognitive Distortions

Cognitive distortions are irrational thoughts or unhelpful thinking patterns that can influence our emotions. We all experience unhelpful thinking patterns to some level; however, experiencing cognitive distortions in extreme forms can be harmful.

Magnification (Catastrophizing) and Minimization: Exaggerating or minimizing the importance of events.
One might believe their own achievements are unimportant, or that their mistakes are excessively important.

Overgeneralization: Making broad interpretations from a single or few events.
“I felt awkward in my class. I am always so awkward.”

Personalization: The belief that one is responsible for events outside of their own control.
“My roommate is always upset. They would be fine if I did more to help them.”

Jumping to Conclusions: Interpreting the meaning of a situation without having all the facts.

- Mind Reading: Interpreting the thoughts and beliefs of others without adequate evidence.
  “The professor did not call on me. They must not like me.”

- Fortune Telling: The belief that you can predict the future outcome of a situation without evidence.
  “If I go to the mall I will have a panic attack.”

Labeling: Using a label to describe a behavior or mistake.
“I’m a loser” or “They’re a bad person.”

Emotional Reasoning: The assumption that emotions reflect the way things really are.
“I feel like I messed up, therefore I must be a bad person.”

Disqualifying the Positive: Recognizing only the negative aspects of a situation while ignoring the positive.
“I only passed the exam this time, it was luck.”

“Should” Statements: The belief that things ought to, or must be a certain way.
“I should have done my assignment earlier.”

All-or-Nothing Thinking: Thinking in absolutes such as “always”, “never”, or “every”.
“I always fail my exams.”

1. Identify the cognitive distortion(s) that you experience (circle or mark above)
2. Write examples of the unhelpful thinking patterns that you experience the most.

Challenging Negative Thoughts

Irrational or unhelpful thinking styles can lead to low self-esteem, anxiety, or depression. Irrational or negative thoughts can also impact academic, relational, or work functioning. For example, a student who has studied for an exam might think they will fail their final. The irrational thought about academic performance will impact how they feel as they prepare for the exam or how they feel about themselves. Challenging unhelpful thinking patterns can allow us to reframe a thought into a healthier belief.

Answer the following questions to challenge your unhelpful/irrational thought:

- What negative thought about a situation/incident/experience am I having?

- What evidence/facts support my thought? Is there evidence contrary to or against my thought?

- Am I interpreting/judging/labeling the situation or experience without examining all of the evidence?

- How would a friend think about this situation? What would a friend say?

- How can I think about the situation/incident in a positive way?

- Will this situation or experience matter six months from now? How about one year from now? Five years?
Cognitive Therapy Techniques to Change Your Thoughts

1. Identify Distortions in automatic thoughts.

2. Examine the Evidence – Instead of assuming that your negative thought is true, examine the actual evidence for it.
   - For example, is it true that I never do anything right? What are some things I do well? What are the things I'm not so good at?

3. The Double-Standard Method – Ask yourself, “Would I say this to a close friend who was very much like me and had a similar problem?” “What would I say to a friend?” Practice saying that to yourself.

4. The Experimental Technique – When you have a negative thought, ask yourself if there is a way you could test it to find out if it is really true.

5. Thinking in Shades of Gray – (useful for all-or-nothing thinking) Remind yourself that things are usually somewhere between 0 and 100 percent.
   - Instead of insisting “I am perfect and never make a mistake” or “I am a horrible person, I messed up/I’m giving up….”
   - acknowledge a mistake, forgive yourself, and move forward with your life.

6. The Survey Method – Ask yourself “Would other people agree that the thought is valid?”
   - Or ask people in your life you trust questions to find out if your thoughts and attitudes are realistic.

7. Define terms – (useful if you are labeling yourself). Instead of putting yourself down as “a failure” or “a loser” or “a fool.” Ask yourself:
   - What does failure mean? What is a loser? What is a fool?

8. The Semantic Method – (useful for “should statements”). Substitute a phrase like “it would be nice” or “it would be preferable” in place of “I should.”
   - This may help you look at the thoughts without having expectations, and decrease times of being too self-critical.

9. Re-attribution – (useful for personalization). Ask yourself what other factors may have contributed to this problem.
   - Focus on solving the problem one step at a time, instead of using up energy towards feeling guilty or blaming yourself.

10. Cost-Benefit analysis. Ask yourself, “How will having this thought/belief help me, and how will it hurt me?”
    - You can also use this question on negative behavior patterns (i.e. lying in bed, spending too much time on social media) or self-defeating beliefs like “I must always try to be perfect.”
Challenge Anxiety

- Practice identifying a rational statement for the following anxiety-producing thoughts:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Anxiety-Producing Thought</th>
<th>Rational Thought/Belief/Statement</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I know I won’t be able to finish my work on time.</td>
<td>Example: I can work for 30 minutes and see how far I get; I might get most of my work finished and can complete the rest after a short break.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I can’t go to class like this – everyone will notice me.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I can’t face or ask the professor for help. They’re going to be upset with me.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

- Now, practice identifying unhealthy/unhelpful thoughts you experience and reframing it to a more balanced rational thought:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Anxiety-Producing Thought</th>
<th>Rational Thought/Belief/Statement</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
