

A lab will be renamed the Alcoa Foundation Environmental Engineering Laboratory, thanks to the $90,000 that the foundation granted to CSUF.

Lab Renovation Is Their Gift To Students—And To The Environment

Raman Unnikrishnan, dean of the College of Engineering and Computer Science, saw the need: The college's environmental engineering laboratory required special equipment and safety upgrades. Craig Brown, director of operations at Alcoa Fastening Systems in Fullerton, filled the need: He helped obtain $90,000 in grants from the Alcoa Foundation to renovate the aging facility located in the engineering building.

"The students will now be able to get genuine research experience in a fully functional laboratory," Unnikrishnan said. "The lab will not only enhance instructional capabilities in current courses, but it will also provide the basis for additional curriculum development as well as more student/faculty research."

Brown, who earned a M.S. degree in engineering from CSUF emphasized, "The project just makes sense in our community, since Alcoa Fastening Systems is local. And being a Cal State Fullerton alumnus made the decision easier."

In honor of the gift, the lab will be named the Alcoa Foundation Environmental Engineering Laboratory.

"We are very grateful for Alcoa's support," Unnikrishnan said. "Our students will graduate better-trained, with practical, hands-on experience, ready to serve industry and society."
