CSU Fullerton Emeriti Center

The Emeriti Center currently is located in Pollak Library South in the southeastern corner of the first floor. Recently access to the Center has been limited owing to earthquake damage. However, it once again can be accessed by Emeriti.

Because of the high demand for space on the Fullerton campus, most emeritus faculty and staff do not have access to dedicated office space on campus. If you need a quiet place to work on campus for research, committee work, or volunteer activities, the Emeriti Center in Pollak Library South may meet your needs.

While the Library is undergoing repairs and renovations, the Emeriti Center is still available for Emeriti to use as office space. Although the Center could use some updating, it does provide a place to work undisturbed. In the future, the Center will move to new space on another floor, but for now you will find a new computer with current Office programs, a phone, as well as several desks and a large conference table with a dozen chairs. (There is no printer at the present time, although one may be added in the near future.)

To access the Center, you must first take the elevator to the second floor, cross into PLS, and sign out a key from the administrative reception desk. You will need to show your Titan Card to obtain the key. Then you descend the stairs and cross the first floor to the Emeriti Center which is in the far southeast corner. Alternatively, you may be able to take the elevator in PLS to the first floor. Or, you can go outside and pass through the Chicano/a Studies Resource Center on the east side of the library, turn sharp left and you will arrive.

If you need more information about the Center, its equipment, or need handicapped access to the Center, please send email to Elizabeth Gibbs (betsybetsy@roadrunner.com).

Users are asked to sign a log so that the extent of usage may be tracked.