Re: The Travelers Summer Research Fellowship Program for Premedical Students

Again this year the Weill Cornell Medical College will conduct a seven-week program for premedical students from diverse backgrounds who have a major interest in working with underserved populations, and will have completed their junior year of college. The entire program is described completely in the attached brochure, which also details the application procedure. The program provides an opportunity for the student to do an independent study-research project under the supervision of a faculty member, and to become acquainted with clinical and public health aspects of medicine that have particular impact on underserved and minority populations.

Please call this program to the attention of junior year students now completing the first half of their year's work, as this is the time for them to apply. We accept only 25 students into this program and, therefore, the students accepted are an excellent group. If you would like more brochures, please let us know. Information about the program can also be found on the following Website: <http://www.med.cornell.edu/education/programs>.
