REFRAMING DISABILITY:
CHALLENGING WHAT WE THINK WE KNOW

DR. AMANDA KRAUS

This workshop will address “what we think we know” about disability. By analyzing language, media and design, we will problematize the dominant narrative on disability. We will explore prevalent models used to frame disability as well as emerging thinking that challenges the idea that disability is a personal tragedy or problem, but a phenomenon created by the design of our environments with far reaching political, social and economic implications. We will end with a discussion of Universal Design and practical strategies to create more inclusive and welcoming spaces, processes and experiences for all.

THE BODY ON THE DINNER TABLE.
FROM 3/5 HUMAN TO SECOND CLASS CITIZENSHIP.

PROFESSOR GWENDOLYN ALEXIS, CSUF AND TRIMAINE DAVIS, CSUF

This workshop will focus on the African American plight "On Being Human." The workshop is about working together as one people, be it in the past or present. We will examine stereotypes, review the historical timeline of African Americans in America and will talk about the importance of working in solidarity in efforts to reach liberation.
Ju is limited in his rights and privileges as compared to those of a U.S. citizen, one being that he is unable to travel freely outside of the country due to the risk of deportation. After 13 years of separation, Ju receives special permission from the U.S. government to travel for an allotted 20 days and reunite with his grandmother who was diagnosed with Alzheimer's. His story represents just one of the millions of undocumented immigrants living in America today.
HOW SOCIAL MEDIA IS REDUCING HATE IN THE NEXT GENERATION

PRESLEY ALEXANDER

When Presley was 7 years old, she was a big fan of YouTube like many kids her age so she wanted to start her own channel. She talked her family into starting a channel with her and she started posting a video every day. What started out as just a fun project turned into a way for Presley to explore the world and learn more about herself in the process. From covering social justice events to teaching science and Japanese and interviewing celebrities, she has been on quite a journey the past five years. Some of her primary causes have become supporting LGBT causes and talking to people about why she is still hopeful for the future even when things look bad these days, and that's what she's here to share with us today.
¿PORQUE STILO? MY STYLE, MY IDENTITY, MY POLITICS

MELISSA VALDOVINOS
