

Although CHAD majors receive internship credit, this program is open to all majors. Mathematics, geology, and health science majors have been involved this year.

Herbst said the new curriculum has been going well with many students and is excited to work hard to ensure this new program will be successful.

"Just seeing the investment that the college students make into the children, into the community, how attached they get and how much they really care for the children and want to see the children grow is really encouraging for me," Herbst said.
